The people of America are losing their ability to innovate, because of a slippery slope of law making in the interest of corporations. I've made my career innovating for corporations, as a creative thinker; I tinker, experiment and test out new ideas and innovations using devices in ways they were never imagined to be used. The world of electronic devices is my sandbox, my canvas and I feel if I own it physically it is my right to do what I want with it privately. I shouldn't be forced to settle with what a corporation wants to force me to do with something I own, I should be able to make it do what I imagine it to do. Making it illegal to continue my practice would be a serious violation of my rights and stifle my ability to bring new innovation to the corporations I work with. If I bought a glass(hardware) filled with water (software)- who is to say I can't add a little bit of color and sugar to learn how to make something new, that's the innovation America was built on.
